October 3, 2012 (Austin, TX) Glenn Pangilinan’s wife, Helene, now has these plates on her car.

Glenn says he was shopping for himself then saw the pink ribbon plates. “I thought, oh, I have to get those for her.” Helene’s last few years have been more than TUF: leukemia, remission, breast cancer, double mastectomy, and now continuing reconstructive surgeries.

The whole family got in on picking the plate message, and they surprised Helene with TUFMOM. “It was a big surprise, and she absolutely loves it!” Glenn says Helene likes getting asked about the plates “because it’s a chance to show that there is HOPE! Fight like a girl!”

The plate messages at the top of the page are all real plates on the cars of real Texans who bought pink plates in September, contributing more than $3000 to fighting breast cancer in Texas.

The two pink ribbon designs offered by www.myplates.com always benefit the National Breast Cancer Foundation based in Frisco, TX. My Plates upped the ante for one month. For the month of September, all 6 pink My Plates' designs delivered $10 each to the National Breast Cancer Foundation.

The National Breast Cancer Foundation funds free mammograms for Texas women without health insurance. Though NBCF is a national organization, a portion of the plate proceeds will stay in Texas, for example as grants to clinics in Houston, Dallas and Austin (names and locations listed below).
